TOPIC: School culture and climate has everything to do with school success. With that, success must be defined and culture and climate must be planned. In order for students to be successful, we have to have positive and caring adults to support students. Adults must have high, reasonable expectations for all children, and leaders must create the climate in which this can happen. We as leaders have to check and keep the pulse of the climate and support adults, as we know this work is heavy lifting. In this session, Dr. Taylor will share strategies that have lead to improved school culture, climate, and success.

OBJECTIVES: Participants will be shown how to conduct a needs assessment, how to set priorities, how to develop action steps, and how to measure and monitor continuous improvement. This workshop will provide school and district leaders with hands-on tools to help them plan effective organizational and instructional leadership to build positive school culture and climate.

Participants should bring an electronic device.
